GNFAC,

Finished up a Level 2 up Specimen Creek today, definitely the thinnest I've seen it. The first windswept terrain you get to is basically not skiable, but once you get back there there is 60-90 cm of faceted snow on the ground that skied alright. We got a whumph on a wind loaded slope down low, HS less than 50cm, hard slab on depth hoar. We did a few ECTs once we got back there and found largely stable snow due to lack of slab, extremely continental.

Thanks!
